

Learningbytes Terms and Conditions

Below is a list of terms and conditions that you agree to when you purchase a Learningbytes course.

General use

With the purchase of any of our courses, you are able to utilize the materials for personal use as well as client work without any limit to the number of times the materials can be used. We realize that developers are busy and need ways to turn work over quickly. In addition, our courses include support for only those customers who purchased from this website. Learningbytes has the right to change the terms of this website and the licensing of any materials at any point.

You may not republish any original Learningbytes materials for sale as courses, ebooks, articles, or any other marketing materials. You may use original Learningbytes materials for teaching in a public school or university. If you want reprint rights to any of the materials, please email. Generally, we are okay with you using materials to build your design/production/development business. We are not okay with you repackaging our materials for resale without approval or some kind of an affiliate agreement.

Refund policy

All sales are final. If you are unhappy with the materials due to your skill level, please email Kelly@Learningbytes.com and we will either come up with a solution or refund your purchase.

Course support

The courses that are purchased on this site include support. All support inquiries and questions shall be addressed in the support forum. You can email a question, however the support forum is the quickest and most efficient way to receive support. Moreover, the support that we offer shall include common issues and bugs that might occur, and not necessarily customization of any product. Support will only be given to those who purchase a course from this website.

Thanks, Kelly
